Healthy Out-of School Places Overweight Prevention Project

This project tests if a framework that integrates community and youth development with the implementation of evidence-based programs can prevent youth obesity. Intervention strategies include community development, after school program environmental change, and evidence-based curriculum (CATCH) promoting healthy eating and physical activity.

Sunflower Foundation

Enhancing the capacity of rural communities to understand and create health food environments in areas with limited access to grocery stores.

This study will develop an index model using food access data obtained with Geographic Information Systems (GIS) technology and detailed information on food environments by direct observation using Nutrition Environment Measures Survey (NEMS), and associate this integrated measure of food environment with Body Mass Index (BMI) data obtained from participants who were measured on height and weight in clinics as part of the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants and Children (WIC).
